Transparency in Global Environmental Governance Aarti Gupta,Michael Mason,2014-07-11 A critical assessment of whether transparency is a broadly transformative force in global environmental governance or plays a more limited role Transparency openness secured through greater availability of information is increasingly seen as part of the solution to a complex array of economic political and ethical problems in an interconnected world The transparency turn in global environmental governance in particular is seen in a range of international agreements voluntary disclosure initiatives and public private partnerships This is the first book to investigate whether transparency in global environmental governance is in fact a broadly transformative force or plays a more limited instrumental role After three conceptual context setting chapters the book examines ten specific and diverse instances of governance by disclosure These include state led mandatory disclosure initiatives that rely on such tools as prior informed consent and monitoring measuring reporting and verification and private or private public largely voluntary efforts that include such corporate transparency initiatives as the Carbon Disclosure Project and such certification schemes as the Forest Stewardship Council The cases which focus on issue areas including climate change biodiversity biotechnology natural resource exploitation and chemicals demonstrate that although transparency is ubiquitous its effects are limited and often specific to particular contexts The book explores in what circumstances transparency can offer the possibility of a new emancipatory politics in global environmental governance stationary activities those that remain at a single location for a period of time pose grave risks to the Arctic environment since the development of technology has made it profitable to exploit natural resources even in such harsh regions

Mainstreaming Climate Change in Development Cooperation Nicolien van der Grijp, 2010-04-29 Climate change development and development cooperation are individually and jointly three politically sensitive complex issues especially in the context of relations between developed and developing countries This book tackles these issues by combining theoretical political and practical perspectives analysing the dominant paradigms and exploring the meaning of the concept of mainstreaming At the practical level it presents the results of case studies focusing on assistance provided by the European Union and key member states and the climate needs articulated by developing countries At the political level it highlights the sensitivities between developed and developing countries and examines the mainstreaming debate in various fora This book is valuable for policymakers academics politicians and non state actors working in the fields of development studies international law politics international relations economics climate change and environmental studies Climate Change and European Leadership J. Gupta,M.J. Grubb,2013-06-29 The issue of climate change is now widely recognised as one of the major challenges for mankind in the 21st century not only because it may ultimately affect many areas of our environment nature and human activity but also because its mitigation may have far reaching consequences for almost all sectors of the economy where energy conversion takes place Although climate change is firmly positioned on the political agenda and some initial targets have been agreed within a global framework we are still far away from a mature political and practical policy which may deliver timely and appropriate results to turn the tide This is partly due to the complex nature of a possible global climate change regime the still early stage of the development of effective and efficient instruments and the wide variety of possible ramifications for individual countries and economic sectors But it is also due to the complexity of the negotiation process and the lack of effective international or even global governance and leadership to tackle a multi dimensional problem of this size and nature This book is the first broad attempt to address the issue of leadership by one of the major parties to the UN Framework Convention on Climate Change in the ongoing international debate and negotiations towards such a policy which inevitably has to be constructed on a global scale Novel Materials in the Environment Great Britain. Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution,2008 The Royal Commission s decision to study novel materials was motivated by concern about the potential for releases to the environment arising from increasing industrial applications of metals and minerals that have not previously been widely used and secondly by the embodiment of nanoparticles and nanotubes in a wide range of consumer products and specialist applications in fields such as medicine and environmental remediation Most of the evidence received focused on nanomaterials particles fibres and tubes on the scale of a few billionths of a metre Chapters 2 and 3 explore the extent to which novel substances are currently being deployed the plausible pathways by which they might enter the environment their likely environmental destinations in use or disposal and the possible consequences of their release to those destinations Chapter 4 considers what arrangements would be most appropriate for the governance of emerging technologies under two conditions that pose serious constraints on any regulator First is the condition of ignorance about the possible environmental impacts in the absence of any kind of track record for the technology Second is the condition of ubiquity the fact that new technologies no longer develop in a context of local experimentation but emerge as globally pervasive systems which challenges both trial and error learning and attempts at national regulation Both new governance approaches and modifications to existing ones are likely to be called for They will need to be rooted in ideas of adaptive management that require multiple perspectives on the issues The Commission s recommendations are based on the premise that it is the functionality of the material not particle size or mode of production which is critical for evaluating its potential impact on the environment or human health

The Defaulting State and the South China Sea Arbitration Alfredo C. Robles Jr., 2023-05-27 This book focuses on the legal and procedural problems caused by China's default in the South China Sea Arbitration. Many of these problems arose because in several respects China departed from the conduct of other defaulting States in cases before the International Court of Justice. The book argues that the Tribunal confronted with the difficulties of maintaining the balance between two parties in a situation of default drew on the full range of its powers to ensure that neither China nor the Philippines would suffer from China's default. Further, the book describes the shortcomings of the submissions of putative amicus curiae. It refutes China's questioning of the independence and impartiality of the experts and of the judges. In so doing, it explains the expert opinions and the Tribunal's assessments of the latter in the areas of satellite imagery, coral reef ecology and navigational safety while rebutting the half truths and counter truths disseminated by Chinese scholars about the proceedings. The book compares China's threats to the independence of the Tribunal to its behavior towards Chinese judges. It places China's accusations of bias against the Tribunal in the context of China's domestic situation and concludes that the Tribunal acting independently and impartially was able to perform the judicial function despite China's default.

Procedure and Substance in International Environmental Law Jutta Brunnée, 2021-02-22 The interplay between procedure and substance has not been a major point of contention for international environmental lawyers. Arguably, the topic's low profile is due to the mostly uncontroversial nature of the field's distinction between procedural and substantive obligations. Furthermore, the vast majority of environmental law scholars and practitioners have tended to welcome the procedural features of multilateral environmental agreements and their potential to promote regime evolution and effectiveness. However, recent developments have served to put the spotlight on certain aspects of the procedure-substance topic. ICJ judgments revealed ambiguity on aspects of the customary law framework on transboundary harm prevention that the field had thought largely settled. In turn, in the treaty context, the Paris Agreement's retreat from binding emissions targets and its decisive turn towards procedure reignited concerns in some quarters over the proceduralization of international environmental law. The two developments invite a closer look at the respective roles of and the relationship between procedure and substance in this field and more specifically in the context of harm prevention under customary and treaty law.
