Theory of the Atheist J. Devau, 2015-12-21 Perfection doesn't come in a human shell The Calibration will tell you that The Calibration will tell you what you are is less that you are flawed But I know they're wrong I can prove it The only question is whether I can do it before my time runs out and I no longer remember what it is to be human Enter a dystopian world where humans are given the opportunity to perfect one innate skill set a process known as calibration and in so doing they trade more and more of their humanity in their quest for perfection This mass perfection is supposed to institute equality and eliminate conflict concern and judgment But the system is far from equal Citizens are given the option to assimilate within 22 years or they are scrapped scalped and uploaded with the whole of their knowledge streamed into the collective and redistributed No matter what everyone will contribute However those rare few who remain uncalibrated cause uproar and chaos in the system and while she'd like to think of herself as insignificant as she fights just to remain human Noel Cambrian quickly becomes the spark that ignites utopia
