 Invasive Paediatric & Perinatal Autopsy John Ciaran Hutchinson, 2019 Introduction Perinatal autopsy contributes useful clinical information to patient management in approximately 40% of cases but remains poorly accepted due to parental concerns regarding disfigurement Post mortem imaging is an alternative but 1 5 T MRI lacks resolution below 18 gestational weeks Additionally the Royal College of Pathologists autopsy guidelines recommend extensive tissue sampling as part of the investigation of fetal loss which imaging alone cannot provide Possible mitigating strategies include micro CT for phenotyping small fetuses and laparoscopic techniques to obtain tissue samples Interrogation of the evidence base for tissue sampling in different clinical scenarios is necessary to develop evidence based practice and recommendations Methods Minimally Invasive Autopsy with Laparoscopy MinImAL was performed in 103 cases Micro CT was optimised in extracted organs and the diagnostic accuracy evaluated in 20 fetuses The Great Ormond Street Autopsy Database was retrospectively interrogated to investigate the yield of internal examination and visceral histology to the cause of death in 5 311 cases
